About the Webinar: "Language is mankind's greatest invention — except, of course, that it was never invented." So says Israeli linguist Guy Deutscher while investigating the evolution of language. Human language is unique among all forms of animal communication. There came to be so many languages with elaborate designs with sophisticated grammars, enormous vocabularies and intricately nuanced shades of meaning. One among such a plethora of languages is English and it happens to be the lingua franca of the world. Given the very fact that English stands out as being the most popular of the languages in vogue across the Globe, the mode and process of its learning is given utmost importance. Among the various methods adopted in imparting and acquiring English language skills, the method of Language through Literature can prove itself to be one among the best. It is tested and proved to be reliable for acquiring four skills of English — Listening, Speaking, Reading and Writing. By adopting exclusively this method, besides getting oneself exposed to cultural phenomena of a class, race or a gentry, one will most importantly be able to gain the grip over language skills. Basically, the language teaching methods include Direct Method, Grammar-Translation Method, Audio-Lingual Method et al. Various genres of English Literature must be incorporated into course components of college curriculum which will pave the way for numerous domains of the language. Since all the language related elements are planted in the composition of a literary work, they are to be picked up for identification, practice and usage. This has been a custom of many literary and non-literary personages for their skills enhancement. This technique is a workable and positively resultant method for which classical literature, inclusive of William Shakespeare's copious works, besides the works of many literary giants and the works of postcolonial literature could be the best source. With an intent to highlight this system of language acquisition, we are pleased to reach out to the Global audience through this International Webinar, on the occasion of William Shakespeare's Birth Anniversary on 23 April.
